King Charles' Tower, or Phœnix Tower, is a part of the ancient fortifications of the city of Chester. The walls, of which a portion is here shown, are among the most remarkable features of the town, and extend around the older district of the city for a distance of nearly two miles, with a varying height of 12 to 40 feet. From the summit of this particular tower King Charles I. watched the defeat of his forces at Rowton Moor on Sept. 27th, 1645.
